Ballot ballyhoo
Election day, not surprisingly, provokes the cynical in some people. The Danceteria (30 W 21st St. 620-0790) promises "underground rock" tonight from both the U.S. and the USSR, plus a lottery in which entrants have a chance to be named President. The prize, the club says, is a trip to Moscow. Doors open at 9 and admission is $6 and a grain of salt. . . The Speakeasy (107 Macdougall St. 598-9670) says it will have music and political commentary tonight by Ellen Stapenhorst and Mr. Death with a series of TV sets turned into the election results. Show times begin at 9. . . There will be straightforward all-night election coverage beginning at 8 at the Kitchen (59 Wooster St. 925-3615) and, making its own comment, a compilation tape, "Political Advertisements 1956-84." This is free.

VILLAGE VOICE

October 31-November 6

ART

Krzysztof Wodiczko: If you spotted those projected images on the Washington Square arch last Saturday night and are curious, photo-cutout documentations of other "completed facades" by this artist can be seen through November 10 at Hal Bromm Gallery, 90 West Broadway, 732-6196. And another outdoor piece, The AT&T Building Projection, will take place Saturday, November 3, at Church and Thomas streets from dusk to midnight. (Levin)

VIDEO

The Making of the President: Mourn (or celebrate) election night with such goodies as Antonio Muntadas's compilation of paid political announcements going back to the dawn of time, the 1950s, that is. Popcorn anyone? November 6, the Kitchen, 59 Wooster Street, 925-3615. (Wooster)

Cheap thrills:
