February 23 and 24, 1979 8:30pm $2.50 / $2.00 members The Kitchen Center, 484 Broome Street Reservations: 925–3615

"Before the Revolution," a work from the Golden Age of the Ballet Russe, will receive its belated New York City premiere on February 23rd and 24th at The Kitchen Center. The work by the irrepressible Eleanora Antinova is presented in conjunction with a display of documentary artifacts (stage designs, costume sketches, character studies, scenario notes) at the Ronald Feldman Gallery, 33 East 74th Street in New York City.

she moved freely among the visiual, literary and performing arts. graphy, decor and costuming have been eclipsed, as has her colorful role as the Black as the essential Antinova for decadence, inauthenticity, eclecticism and self-indulgence, but her provocative works transcend petty temporal barriers. A restless spirit, an artist between media, of the Ballet Russe, has been lost to posterity for well nigh fifty years. indeed welcome. neglect of decades. genres. Dance, the most ephemeral artform, is at last receiving its due in this decade of historical reconstructions. The work of Eleanora Antinova, celebrated in her day as a leading figure Ballerina of the Ballet Russe. Alas, her achievement has fallen into oblivion; her accomplishments Diaghilev artist who achieved a complete (if idiosyncratic) fusion of The Ronald Feldman Gallery exhibition (February 17-March 17) is Recent musuem exhibitions have done nothing to Critics taunted this exciting revival of the full-length "Before the Revolution." appears at the piano as Monsieur Mozart. No dedicated balletomane will want to miss Antinova, the Black Ballernia, in the role of Marie Antoinette-as-Shepherdess. In the role, Antinova evokes for Russian emigré colleagues the bitter-sweetness of an ancien Igor Stravinsky, Diaghilev, régime only an American could know. As performed at The Kitchen Center, the revival of "Before the Revolution" will feature Louis XVI, the Marquis, Olga Spessivtzeva, the Countess, Vaslav Nijinsky, The Dramatis Personae include Sergei Pavlovich Sans Culotte and a Lamb. Tamara Karsavina, Marcia Goodman , Susanna,

+

Whitney Museum in May 1978. Eleanor Antin is well-known for her work in the performing and visual arts: Houston and Chicago, the Long Beach Museum and the Whitney Museum of American person who exhibited 100 boots at the Museum of Modern Art. Other works have been featured at the Venice Bienale, P.S.1/Clocktower, the Museums of Contemporary Art Antin's one-woman film and video exhibition "The Ballerina" was featured at the the Museums of Contemporary Art of she is the

++ + +

For information on events taking place at The Kitchen Center, please call Joe Hannan, 925-3615.